Notes

---

Note [General]

Thomas Irvine of Midbrake, Shetland, was the son of James Irvine (1745-1813), merchant, and Elizabeth Gauden of Fetlar. He was born in 1790 in the Haa of Midbrake. He spent some time teaching at a home for the deaf and dumb in London and returned to Shetland in 1820 where, from 1827, he surveyed lands. He died in 1877 and was succeeded by his brother Gilbert W. Irvine. James Thomas Irvine, son of Gilbert Irvine and Margaret Hoseason of Fetlar, was born on 29 September 1826. He was the nephew of Thomas Irvine of Midbrake. Irvine worked as an architect in Peterborough and was associated with Sir George Gilbert Scott (1811-1878) and John Loughborough Pearson (1817-1897). As an architect he was involved in the Peterborough Cathedral Tower Rebuilding Scheme and in the restoration of Bath Abbey. He died on 6 June 1900.

	Scope and content: With, on same sheet, copy reply and 'memorandum to posterity' by Irvine: 'I was perfectly aware of the desirableness of doing all that could be done to improve agriculture in Shetland. I would have heartily agreed to it had it been for that end. But as it was merely to get rid of the common rights, to exterminate human life and make all barren sheepwalks and cattle pastures, and as I had heard enough of the curses not loud but deep that were uttered in distress by poor old creatures turned out of a miserable house in their old age, to hock holes in the banks or to wander forth and die in foreign lands, I declined to assent to it. I had neither the power or wealth to resist successfully, but I could retard for a year the fortunes of the day, and did so, and refused all assent of mine'.
